April 6, 1959

Dear . . .

The first mail this morning brought about fifty marked questionnaires indicating the considered opinion of the persons who returned these questionnaires on labor legislation, tax reform, a balanced budget, extension of minimum wage and federal aid to education.

I note some divergence of opinion among those who signed the questionnaires and perhaps the only good responsive answer I could make at the moment is that everyone of these major propositions has been receiving careful attention and that, generally speaking, I believe my present views are quite in accord with the opinions expressed by the questionnaires.

I am glad to have your views.

With every good wish,

Everett McKinley Dirksen