Dear:

One of the major tasks confronting the Congress is a complete review of the Revenue Code. This will involve every phase of taxation.

By direction of the last Congress, the Treasury Department has prepared a package of tax reform proposals for consideration by the Congress and the new Administration. At the present time the House Ways and Means Committee is holding hearings on these proposals, from which eventually some sound legislation will evolve.

In my judgment, the review of our tax structure is a study that is long overdue, and it certainly will have my best attention.

Sincerely,

Everett McKinley Dirksen
